

Intertwined

Brandon Szabo

The world as I see it is sharply defined.
Each life affects another – all are intertwined.
    There is wrong and there is right.
    There is day and there is night.
    There is young and old, weak and strong.
    There is silence, laughter, dance, and song.
    There is work and there is play.
    There is yesterday, tomorrow, and today.
    There is sadness, lies, confusion, and strife.
    There is joy, truth, love, and hope in life.
There are deserts, mountains, rivers, and seas.
    There are flowers, plants, and trees.
There are fish in ponds and birds in their nests.
There are animals north, east, south, and west.
There are some that take - some that give to all.
    There is winter, spring, summer, and fall.
    There is stranger, family, foe, and friend.
    There is a beginning, a middle, and an end.
Each life affects another – all are intertwined.
    The world as I see it is sharply defined.